

Free Event
Tuesday, November 16th
Seattle Times Auditorium
7:30 PM to 9 PM

The 2010 Mid-term Elections

---

Winners and Losers: What it all Means

An estimated $3 billion has been spent placing campaign commercials on television during this 2010, mid-term election. From “I am not a witch,” to demon sheep to accusations of fiscal improprieties, television ads have reflected the contentious, some say unethical and nasty nature of campaigns at the local and national levels.

What will the outcomes mean for the citizens of the State of Washington and the nation? How will the election results affect next year’s election and the next presidential campaign? Will the results help or hinder our ability to return the national economy to prosperity? Are current campaign practices, including costs, influencing who will run for office?

An outstanding panel will discuss these and other questions during a free and open to the public post-election panel including:

- Ryan Blethen, editorial page editor, The Seattle Times
- George Griffin, public affairs consultant
- Pramila Jayapal, founder and Executive Director of OneAmerica
- Essex Porter, political reporter, KIRO-TV
- Richard Young, professor, political science, Seattle University

Event Location: Seattle Times Auditorium
1120 John Street
Seattle, WA

This event is presented as a public service by:

- Evergreen Chapter of the American Society for Public Administration
- Seattle Management Association
- Municipal League of King County
- Washington News Council
- Seattle Association of Black Journalists
- Blacks in Government – Southeast Chapter
- Sea Beez

For more information, contact:
J. Paul Blake at (206) 684-8180
jpaul.blake@seattle.gov